The most eminent figure to have been connected directly with Fort Toulouse was General Andrew Jackson, who established a military post there during the War of 1812 after his victory over the Indians at Horseshoe Bend. The outpost was named Fort Jackson in his honor and played a key role in the treaty negotiations and eventual settlement of the Indian land by Americans.

Must See! A reconstructed and animated fort of 1751 can be visited in the Fort Toulouse – Fort Jackson State Historic Site, Elmore County, Alabama. You can see few buildings with costumed people acting as French garrison. There is a Creek house beside the reconstructed fort. Moat and ruins of Fort Jackson can be seen at the very site. A prehistoric Mississippian Indian Mound is seen east of the ruins.

Unlike the usual frontier settlements, Fort Toulouse was both a diplomatic post, since its officers acted as resident ministers, and a military post. Because it was located in a friendly territory adjoining an area under a rival (British) influence, the post participated in psychological warfare rather than in blood letting. It used trade and aid, and was familiar with spies and double agents—welcoming and debriefing British defectors; no cannon was discharged in anger at Toulouse.
